

Allan McKisson / Vice President, U.S. Human Resources

Allan McKisson, Vice President of U.S. Human Resources, is responsible for ensuring that Manpower has the talent to develop and sustain strategic differentiation, developing unique and contemporary compensation plans to drive performance and making certain that the company has current and future leaders to sustain outstanding performance.

McKisson, who joined Manpower in 2005, has worked on the factory floor and presented in executive boardrooms. His Human Resource experience includes employee relations, communications, talent management, creation of high performance work systems and using HR to build global organizations. He has worked in manufacturing, financial services, globally branded products, consulting and with a technology start-up company.

A graduate of the Wittenberg University in Springfield, Ohio, McKisson also holds a master's degree in business administration from the University of Toledo. He has three grown children and resides with his wife, Mary, in Milwaukee.